05 EXPERT COMMENTS

Tax effect explains withdrawal, not substantive liability — The figure recorded in MAIT 163/2007 is less than Rs.1 crore. It describes counsel's stated basis for withdrawing this appeal, not an amount ordered to be refunded or a judicial determination that the assessment was correct. The one-page order gives no assessment year or underlying addition from which a merits conclusion could be reconstructed.

The express non-affirmation limits the precedent — The Court specifically separates withdrawal from approval of the Tribunal's reasoning. The taxpayer obtains closure of this appeal, but this order supplies no ratio on the unidentified tax dispute. Its reservation of the legal issue for an appropriate case prevents the dismissal from being cited as High Court endorsement of every proposition in the Tribunal order.

Revival requires a further application — The liberty granted is to seek revival if something survives; the order does not itself revive proceedings or identify an exception that has already been established. Any later application and judicial response would be separate events requiring verification. The present record remains MAIT 163/2007 dated 2020-01-06.
